Are you Sick of Spam?

Spam is junk mail...unsolicited email. It's one of the most hated forms of advertising. There's no cure for spam once you start getting it. It seems to keep growing.

It's possible to avoid getting into the spammers' address books in the first place. The main thing is to never post your mail email address online. Whenever you fill out a form online, look for check boxes requesting permission for the company to send you email or to share your email address. Check "NO".

Since there is no cure, you can set up a different email account and use that address for online shopping, software registration, etc. While you can't always stop spammers from sharing your email address, you can take action to detour it.

Have you noticed lately that some status updates on Facebook appear larger?

It's not just you! While this feature hasn't been rolled out to everyone, some Facebook users are seeing larger typeface sizes in posts in their feed. The larger typeface is size 24, while the normal one is 14. The larger typeface appears to be used when text posts are 34 characters or fewer, and only when your post is just text (with no attachments like videos or articles). No one knows for sure why Facebook made this change, but experts speculate it's to draw attention to more personal posts.
